County's Oldest Citizen Dies

Mrs. Edmonia Burge Coleman, widow of a Confederate veteran, Charles Henry Coleman, died January 2. She is pictured above, at age 99, holding a picture of her husband. She was the county's oldest citizen, having celebrated her 102nd birthday October 18, 1963. A step-great granddaughter, Gina Marie Roach, was born the day "Miss Eddie" died. Gina Marie's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Roland, Roach of Lynchburg, Mrs. Coleman's husband, veteran Charles Henry Coleman, who died 18 years ago, lived to be 101. His son, Taylor Coleman, recalls that Mr. Coleman was with Lee at Appomattox during the Surrender negotiations. He wore a bayonet scar on one hand, was fond of attending veterans' meetings, and loved to sing and whistle "Dixie" whenever the conversation turned to the War Between the States.

Dog Heads and Rabies

"There have been no cases of rabies here in the past several years," Pitsenberger said, because of mandatory vaccination of dogs. He has taken dog heads to Richmond to have rabies tests, he said.

Future Needs and Projects

"We need a health center", declared Pitsenberger. He said that the present location does not give enough room for privacy for patients — or enough space to conduct even such a simple clinic as the Sabin "make-up" clinic of a few weeks ago. "Parking space is extremely limited", he said.

Pitsenberger announced that a program for TB detection is underway, with plans to administer the "patch test" to first and eighth grade pupils throughout the county.

Trash Dumping

Pitsenberger showed a map with 47 unauthorized dumping grounds marked. The county, at present, has one authorized dump — the one owned and controlled jointly by the Town of Appomattox and the county. There is evidence scattered all over the county, he said, that citizens are dumping garbage and trash wherever they want to. He told the young people that statutes need to be drawn up — and enforced — in order to make the county look more attractive and to cut down of these obvious sources of flies, rats, and other contamination.
